SHE FOUND OUT

In legal circles a favorite story is told of the new servant girl who the day after her arrival pricked her finger with a fork and seemed greatly distressed.

"Only thing, ma'am," she said to her mistress, "inflammation or blood poisoning might set in."

"Don't alarm yourself, my girl; the fork is real silver, take my word for it."

"You are quite sure, ma'am?"

"Positive."

Next morning the girl had disappeared. So, too, had the silver!

BROTHER OF KING OF SIAM IN U. S. TO SEE "SIGHTS"

After three years in France, studying military tactics, Prince Prajaitopk (above), brother of the King of Siam, is in the United States with his wife (below) seeing the sights before returning home.

LEAVES IT TO HIM

The following conversation between a prosecuting attorney and a prisoner was heard in a court room far up in the mountains of West Virginia:

"Prisoner, do you know this man?"

"No, I don't."

"I've seen him."

"Did you maliciously assault him?"

"I hit him."

"Did you use a dangerous weapon?"

"No, I had a club."

"Did you knock him down?"

"He fell."

"Did you hurt him?"

The prisoner smiled for the first time. "Ask him," he replied.

AFFAIRS of the HEART

By Mrs. Thompson

DESPITE ALL, SHE LOVES HIM

Dear Mrs. Thompson: To begin with, I am 24 years old and have been married over five years. We have two children under 3 years of age. My husband and I have been separated for about two and a half months. We separated because we couldn't agree on anything. He seemed to think I nagged all the time and it seemed to me he took delight in seeing how miserable he could make me. So we fussed and couldn't seem to get along. Yet I love him, he is the father of my children and they love him. And it hurts to have them call for him and want him. Of course, he comes to see them and thinks lots of them, and that is what makes the divorce seem almost impossible. I don't want to be parted from them myself, yet I don't want them to be parted from him. As I said, I love him and hate to think of spending the rest of my life without him. I can't seem to interest myself in any other man, though there are several who have asked for my company. There is one who even wants to marry me, though I have never gone with him or given him any encouragement. How would you advise me to go about forgetting. Of course, I intend going to work and that will throw me into new associations. But tonight my heart feels awfully heavy. If I could only erase these five years and relive them, I know part of our matrimonial troubles are my own fault. But my husband don't seem to think we can ever make a go of it again (not that I've ever asked him to), so I see no chance

M. H.—Happiness with your husband seems to be a hopeless matter since he does not know how to tell the truth and will not work steadily. Probably the wise course for you to take would be to divorce your husband and enjoy the companionship of other young men. I hesitate in advising you this way, however, because it is evident that you love him. I think you are making a mistake in letting him come to see you. If you decide against divorce, tell him emphatically that he may not come to see you or expect you to recognize him as your husband until he has made good and proved himself worthy of your love.

AGNES AND MABEL—It was all right to let the young man take you home and pay for the drinks if he was gentlemanly in the way he approached you and did not do it with the attitude of a flirt. You
